

Ethical and Public Health Implications of Genomic and Personalised Medicine

Round-Table Discussion with Director of Centre for Personalised Medicine,
The Wellcome Trust Centre for Human Genetics at Oxford University

Date: 4 November 2014, Tuesday
Time: 10:30 am to 12:00 pm
Venue: Room 301, 3/F, Li Ka Shing Medical Sciences Building, Prince of Wales Hospital, Shatin, New Territories, Hong Kong
Speaker: Dr Ingrid Slade, Director of Centre for Personalised Medicine, Oxford University

The CUHK Centre for Bioethics cordially invites you to join the special informal meeting with Dr Ingrid Slade, the director of Centre for Personalised Medicine and a member of the Ethox Centre, a multidisciplinary bioethics research centre at Oxford University.

The meeting will begin with a talk given by Dr Slade about the ethical and public health challenges around the implementation of genomic medicine and personalised medicine in the UK NHS system. It will be followed by interactive discussion on how these challenges are dealt in Hong Kong and potential areas of research collaboration about ethical, legal, and social implications of personalised medicine using genomic information.

About Speaker:

Dr Ingrid Slade is the Director of the Centre for Personalised Medicine at Oxford University. Following training in medicine at the University of Bristol, she went on to specialty training in Clinical Genetics in London. During this time she undertook PhD in Genetics and Epidemiology at the Institute of Cancer Research, London, identifying and characterising genes that confer susceptibility to childhood tumours. She also took specialty training in Public Health Medicine in 2011. She is the co-ordinator of the Evaluation and Ethics Workstream in the Mainstreaming Cancer Genetics Programme; a Wellcome Trust funded initiative that aims to make genetic testing part of routine cancer patient care. Her time is divided between the Health Economics Research Centre and Ethox Centre in the Nuffield Department of Population Health at Oxford University.

We are looking forward to seeing you on 4 Nov 2014!
